After "Gee whiz"—what then?

Then the work of the world begins.

When 'near-death' is past and life resumes, when all the talk shows are over and the books read, the needs have just begun—for professional knowledgeable for individual accountability for organizations to serve for personal integrity

For this fifth annual North American conference, we look at some of the ways in which individuals and groups are making practical use of information about near-death experiences.

For

nurses, physicians, psychotherapists social workers

emergency medical personnel near-death experiencers and those close to them

teachers, clergy and theologians funeral directors and bereavement counselors

hospice staff and volunteers anyone who has lost or is losing someone they love

those who are dying

'95 About IANDS

IANDS grew out of the need of early researchers in the field to share responsible information about near-death and similar experiences, offer companionship to persons who have had an experience, and promote knowledgeability among the general public and professional care givers.

*"What a gift, these conferences!
Real information about NDEs."*
